Introduction

Evidence-based reviews of new and emerging medical services are conducted on a regular basis to help inform clinical decision-making. These reviews include: data from peer-reviewed literature, results of clinical trials, outcomes, regulatory requirements, and professional input from those in the field of the medical service under review. Healthcare providers from multiple specialties discuss the data and its application and then make a recommendation based on all of the evidence about the service in question. If an experimental and investigational service has no documentation to indicate a lack of benefit, or there is no proven benefit that it is equal to or better than the standard of care, it is considered experimental and investigational. In certain cases, however, these services may be useful and considered medically necessary for specific patients. This policy describes when experimental and investigational (E&I) services and devices may be considered medically necessary.

Note: The Introduction section is for your general knowledge and is not to be taken as policy coverage criteria. The rest of the policy uses specific words and concepts familiar to medical professionals. It is intended for providers. A provider can be a person, such as a doctor, nurse, psychologist, or dentist. A provider also can be a place where medical care is given, like a hospital, clinic, or lab. This policy informs them about when a service may be covered.

Service	Medical Necessity
Experimental and investigational (E&I) services	Experimental and investigational (E&I) services may be considered medically necessary for all of the following indications: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The medical service or application is supported in peer-reviewed medical literature and accepted as safe and effective by the medical community. There must be documentation of improvement if the health outcome is referenced by evidence-based medicine standards; and • It must be approved by appropriate regulatory agencies (eg, U. S. Food and Drug Administration [FDA]) for the specific intended use or purpose; and • The scientific evidence and/or clinical outcomes for the medical service and/or application are peer-reviewed and must be attainable outside the experimental or investigational setting; and • Application of the medical service must be within accepted standards of good medical practice; and • The medical service and/or its application must be appropriate in the treatment of the diagnosis or condition specified in the request.

Device Exemption	Coverage
Devices with Investigational Device Exemption (IDE)	Category A: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Category A devices will not be covered because they are considered experimental and investigational, and therefore not considered reasonable and necessary medical services. Routine care costs of patients participating in clinical trials may be covered if allowed under the member’s specific benefit plan, according to related policy 10.01.518 Clinical Trials, upon determination that the device is intended for the diagnosis, monitoring, or treatment of an immediately life-threatening disease/condition, but the device itself will not be covered.

Device Exemption	Coverage
	Category B <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Category B devices may be considered for coverage if allowed under patient’s specific benefit plan and all of the following apply: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ The device must be used within the context of the FDA approved clinical trial. ○ The device must be used according to the clinical trial’s approved patient protocol. ○ The medical necessity of the device must be established for the particular patient and medical appropriateness established for the amount, duration, and frequency of use or applications of the service. ○ The setting where the service is furnished must be appropriate according to the member’s medical needs, condition, and benefit plan. Note: See Related Information below for more Limitations
Devices with Humanitarian Device Exemptions (HDE)	If appropriate under the patient’s specific plan, all of the following must apply for consideration of coverage for a Humanitarian Use Device (HUD) on the basis of a HDE: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • A HUD may only be used in facilities that have an established local Institutional Review Board (IRB) to supervise the clinical testing of the device or service). • IRB approval for use of the HUD must be current according to the IRB requirements (eg, updated annually); • The HUD must only be used for HDE approved indications specified in the product labeling.

Coding

Code	Description
ICD-10 Diagnosis Code
Z00.6	Encounter for examination for normal comparison and control in clinical research program Note: ICD-10 Code Z00.6 must be reported as the secondary diagnosis
Modifiers
Q0	Investigational clinical service provided in a clinical research study that is in an approved clinical research study
Q1	Routine clinical service provided in a clinical research study that is in an approved clinical research study

Note: CPT codes, descriptions and materials are copyrighted by the American Medical Association (AMA). HCPCS codes, descriptions and materials are copyrighted by Centers for Medicare Services (CMS).

Related Information

Limitations

Category B devices will not be covered if any of the following apply:

- When the services or technologies are in the developmental or testing stage
- When there is no final regulatory or governmental approval
- When IDEs are applied in the inpatient setting, where they will be included in the Diagnosis Related Group (DRG) payment

The service or procedure will be considered not medically necessary if the available scientific proof does not indicate that the treatment is safe and effective for treating or diagnosing the relevant medical condition or illness or the intervention has not been shown to improve health outcomes. Information may be accessed from the following sources (not limited to):

- Current and published scientific evidence and technology literature
- Technology updates, news, and summaries from Hayes, the Cochrane Collaborative or other nationally recognized organizations, such as medical experts or affected specialty societies

- Published medical literature in peer-reviewed journals
- Published opinions, actions, and other relevant documents of independent external research organizations such as NIH, NCI, FDA and HHS

In addition to the above criteria, the Plan will consider recommendations of national physician specialty societies, nationally recognized professional healthcare organizations and public health agencies, and in its sole discretion, may consider other relevant factors, including information from the practicing community.

Evidence Review

Background

Category A (Experimental) device refers to a device for which “absolute risk” of the device type has not been established (that is, initial questions of safety and effectiveness have not been resolved) and the FDA is unsure whether the device type can be safe and effective.

Category B (Non-experimental/investigational) device refers to a device for which the incremental risk is the primary risk in question (that is, initial questions of safety and effectiveness of that device type have been resolved), or it is known that the device type can be safe and effective because, for example, other manufacturers have obtained FDA-premarket approval or clearance for that device type

The Plan staff routinely conduct evidence-based reviews of new and emerging medical services. This assessment includes:

- A thorough review of available scientific information, which may include peer-reviewed literature, results of clinical trials, outcomes data, regulatory requirements, and input from professionals in the field of the medical service under review;
- Discussion among a multidisciplinary group of health care providers to achieve an adequate understanding of the medical science and its application;
- An appropriate coverage recommendation based on the sum of the evidence;

- Identification of medical services as “experimental and investigational” according to the definition provided in this Policy.

Services determined to be experimental and investigational are listed, and experimental and investigational services which demonstrate a significant body of scientific evidence supporting safety and effectiveness are removed from the list. If there is no documentation that the experimental and investigational service does not provide benefit, or there is not any benefit that is equal or better than the standard of care, it is considered to be experimental and investigational. Due to the frequency at which new medical services are developed and researched, this list of services should not be considered all-inclusive as it has the potential to change frequently due to the body of evidence available.
