Introduction

A formulary is a well-designed selection of drugs that meet the needs of most patients. Formulary exclusion benefits normally do not provide coverage for drugs that are not included in the formulary. However, there are cases when a drug outside of the formulary may be the best therapeutic choice for a patient.

This policy outlines when a drug not included in the formulary may be covered.

Note: The Introduction section is for your general knowledge and is not to be taken as policy coverage criteria. The rest of the policy uses specific words and concepts familiar to medical professionals. It is intended for providers. A provider can be a person, such as a doctor, nurse, psychologist, or dentist. A provider also can be a place where medical care is given, like a hospital, clinic, or lab. This policy informs them about when a service may be covered.

Policy Coverage Criteria

Criteria described below apply to coverage requests for excluded drugs in circumstances that are not specifically addressed in any other policy.

Note: Every medical necessity request submitted for an excluded drug requires documentation in the form of medical records/chart notes, lab work results, and other clinical information as requested by the reviewer.

Medical Necessity

Coverage of an excluded drug may be considered medically necessary under any of the following three circumstances:

1. An excluded medication that has one or more formulary alternatives:
 - Use of an excluded medication may be considered medically necessary when the prescriber has documented treatment failure, intolerance, or contraindication to at least two of the formulary alternatives.

Note: In cases where only one alternative is available, only that formulary agent needs to have been ineffective, not tolerated, or contraindicated.

OR

2. An excluded medication that has no formulary alternatives:
 - When no reasonable formulary alternative exists, medical necessity of the excluded drug will be determined by medical review of the individual case circumstances. Medical necessity will be evaluated based on:
 - The drug's labeled indications, contraindications, appropriate dosing, and other clinical information contained in the label.
 - Published peer-reviewed clinical evidence from primary and tertiary medical literature sources, if the proposed use is off-label.

OR

3. An excluded medication is brand name that has a generic equivalent available. Use of the brand product may be considered medically necessary with documentation of the following:
 - The prescriber is requesting the brand name drug due to a documented adverse reaction, allergy, or sensitivity to the generic equivalent and there has been treatment failure, intolerance, or contraindication to at least one other formulary alternative.

Note: In cases where only one alternative is available, only that formulary agent needs to have been ineffective, not tolerated, or contraindicated.

Medical Necessity

OR

- The prescriber is requesting the brand name drug due to a documented therapeutic failure with a generic equivalent in the same therapeutic class of drugs and there has been treatment failure, intolerance, or contraindication to at least one other formulary alternative.

Note: In cases where only one alternative is available, only that formulary agent needs to have been ineffective, not tolerated, or contraindicated.

OR

- The prescriber is requesting the brand name drug because transition to a generic equivalent may result in a destabilization or unnecessary risk to the patient. Note that clinical justification and medical records are also required for the review.

Related Information

This policy applies only to formulary exclusion drugs pertaining to the Essentials formulary. As used in this policy, “formulary” refers to the applicable formulary list specified in a member’s contract. The policy does not apply to other benefit designs. This policy is managed by the pharmacy benefit.

Definition of Terms

Formulary: A formulary is a list of drugs approved by the Pharmacy and Therapeutics Committee (P&T) for routine use. A well-designed formulary should provide adequate drug selection to meet the treatment needs of most patients; however, there will always be exceptional cases where a nonformulary drug may be the best therapeutic choice.

Formulary alternative: A formulary alternative is a drug that is not generically equivalent to the reference product but is expected to produce similar treatment outcomes in the majority of patients with a certain condition. Formulary alternatives may be either brand name or generic drugs.

Formulary drug: A formulary drug (also known as a preferred drug) is a drug that is on the formulary list. Drugs that are not on the list are referred to as nonformulary drugs, or as in the case of this policy, those could be referred to as “excluded” drugs.

Generic equivalent: When the original patent on a brand name drug expires, other manufacturers may produce generic versions. A generic equivalent is a generic that has been approved by the FDA, based on pharmacokinetic studies that demonstrate delivery of similar amounts of the active ingredient(s) to the blood stream of healthy volunteers, with comparable concentration-time profiles. Generic equivalence evaluations are published by the FDA in the Orange Book.

Label: Product label refers to the FDA approved prescribing information that is available for every legend drug approved for use in the U.S. The label includes indications, contraindications, recommended dosing, warnings, precautions, side effects, drug interactions and information on safety in pregnancy and other special populations. The drug’s pharmacology, pharmacokinetics, and available dosage forms are also provided. The current format also includes a summary of the pivotal clinical trials that were submitted to FDA in support of the New Drug Application.

This prescribing information is included as a package insert with the product and is available on the manufacturer’s website.

Lack of a formulary alternative: Occasionally, a drug may not have a suitable formulary alternative. This occurs when a product has recently been approved by the FDA and is pending formulary review, or when the Pharmacy and Therapeutics committee believes the potential risks generally outweigh the demonstrated clinical benefits of the drug. In such cases, it may be appropriate to use the drug in certain individual patients, despite its lack of formulary status.
